(70 stars) by Kevin on 05/26/2010 Great set of icons. I highly recommend this for anyone wanting to use these in their applications! Q: How do I get my website to send data to my API? The Stack Overflow "how to do X with ASP.Net" questions are very popular and, to a lesser extent, the ASP.Net API. I want to create a "how to do X with ASP.Net" question, and I would like to be able to send data to my API. So far, I have: Created an ASP.Net API that contains a "create a question" method. Created a form with an ASP.Net textbox that sends data to the API. But, after pressing the submit button, I just get a blank white screen with no error message. I have checked that the Method is correct and that the ModelState is invalid (by posting back to the form). So, how do I get my website to send data to my API? I'm using Visual Studio 2017 Community Version 15.9.4, ASP.Net Core RC1, and a website that is the "Start-up project". I have a pretty basic understanding of ASP.Net, so if you need more information, please just tell me. I would appreciate any suggestions you can give me, as that is what I need the most right now. A: Do note that sending data with a POST request is the default HTTP method, so most servers will receive data on the request, regardless of the method. If the server does not process this request, you need to set the request method as GET. You can do this either by submitting the 6a5afdab4c
