Field of the Invention The invention concerns a control head for a fluidized-gas heat exchanger. 2. Description of the Related Art A control head of this kind, generally formed by an annular disk of metal, is known from the applicant's German U.S. Pat. No. 5,037,280. It is attached to a support disk and carries, on its upper side remote from the support disk, an actuating element, in the form of a so-called "throttling finger" for example, for controlling the supply of fluidization gas to the fluidizedgas heat exchanger. In order to accommodate this actuating element, the control head has, on its lower side, an annular groove formed in the supporting disk; the lower surface of the control head is in tight fit in the groove. This design involves various problems. Specifically, if the control head is exchanged for another, the groove in the support disk has to be designed so as to be capable of withstanding the loads of the loads of the supporting disk, and consequently this design element must be increased or reinforced. Moreover, various sealing elements, such as non-fusible seals, are necessary in order to protect the annular groove, which is difficult to access. In addition, the supporting disk and the control head are usually joined, in an adhesion-resistant manner, in the axial direction, and there is a risk that 3da54e8ca3
