The girl from San Francisco, California, had previously been charged with first-degree murder, but was found guilty of only the lesser crime after she got into a bitter dispute with a babysitter over the baby's mother's appointment. The babysitter had interrupted the girl and the baby while the mother was visiting her father and the babysitter was baby-sitting the child. A district attorney, San Francisco DA Jeff Rosen explained, "The jury determined that the 16-year-old acted with malice when she stabbed the eight-month-old baby." The DA added that "On the day of the murder the babysitter told the mother that the toddler had a very bad diaper rash. When the mother went back into her apartment the babysitter was holding the baby and believed the mother was headed back to her apartment when the babysitter interrupted." Police ultimately found the child unresponsive and with a single stab wound to the chest in the apartment the babysitter was in with the baby. The toddler was rushed to the nearby hospital, where he was pronounced dead. The baby's mother stated, "I'm very grateful for the jury's verdict and I hope it will bring some relief to the family." San Francisco DA Rosen said, "This case illustrates an old saying: 'It's better to have loved and lost than never to have loved at all.' The mother in this case did everything in her power to save her son. "This case never should have been prosecuted as a homicide, rather as a case of a teen-age

Spywareware Spywarewareis a subcategory of adware, often found in the form of a modified version of a legitimate program. Most of these usually have a misleading name, like 'PronySoft' or 'SuperAntiSpyware'. Moreover, they often offer to provide security features for your computer. In most cases, this is a false promise –

they are merely offering to monitor your computer activities and use them for advertising purposes. In general, these programs have one purpose only – to invade users' computers and collect information about them. This includes information about the computer itself, but also general web browsing history, search queries, installed applications, system settings, downloaded files, credentials, and the like. Most adware is fairly easy to remove. However, Spywareware can be very difficult to get rid of, because it is in a form that is difficult to recognize. A known and reliable brand Spywareware is known for being one of the most intrusive and powerful subcategories of adware. As of late, many large media companies have been involved with cybercriminals, as the original software developers are often quite savvy with the technology. However, they have been known to use the technology to engage in all sorts of computer crimes, from malware to media piracy to human trafficking. This is the main reason why developers of anti-malware solutions have opted not to include this software in their programs. As such, if you use an anti-malware program, you should be sure that your software is up to date. There are a few good news: the software is not very popular and, for the most part, has not been seen to be abused in any way. Causes Most of the time, Spywareware is inserted into the software, not downloaded from the web. In general, users must download one of the adware software, which may appear as an update or a standalone package. More specifically, in both cases, attackers will have installed a keylogger or a keystroke logger. This is a malicious program that will record every keystroke you make
