The homology model of GKLP indicated that Cys26 and Cys29 are the functional residues of the arginine-to-cysteine substitutions (Figure 1(ref-type="fig")B). Of these two functional residues, Cys29 is buried in the protein core, whereas Cys26 is exposed on the surface and close to the Mg²⁺-binding site. The cysteine side chain is likely to be involved in the interaction between amino acid residues and Mg²⁺ ions. Therefore, the docked structure of GKLP suggests that Cys26 plays a major role in the interaction with Mg²⁺, based on its proximity to the metal ion and contribution to the negatively charged Mg²⁺-binding site. !((A) Structural comparison of the docked GKLP model (PDB ID: 3K07) with the X-ray crystal structure (PDB ID: 1GPZ). Both GKLP structures were obtained using MODELLER^[@ref22] with the 1GPZ structure as a template. A C α backbone trace of the top-ranked model was superimposed with that of the template 570a42141b
