RyDkapsel is a unique and streamlined take on the role-playing game genre, mixing unique exploration, over the top power and rich lore into a simple-to-play package. FEATURES Rydekapsel's core gameplay features have been fleshed out with a variety of new gameplay elements. While the player will still be exploring the overworld map, new features are added to encourage exploration. To name a few new gameplay elements: Have you ever wanted to be the first to document a photo? Say by adding a time stamp to it? Then this is the game for you. "Photo Dash" is a way of creating a diary of your visit to the Eiffel Tower in Paris. It's a new twist on the "collect 'em all" genre, and it's really fun. Being first is a lot more fun than being the second. What kind of a game would that be though? You'd have to be really early on the train to be able to do it, or really late. And then you have to hustle through all the tourists to keep up with the record. The idea is that a game mechanic tries to figure out what kind of game you want to play. There is a problem with some games that try to figure out what kinds of game you like. Usually they are too complicated for you to understand. So I chose something much simpler - if you don't know what kind of game you want to play, use any game at all. A collection of portraits: You are in control of the camera. The camera is rolling. You can flip the image horizontally, vertically or both. You can't stop the camera. What to do? * The color of the game, while you play: The game is presented in monochromatic shades of gray, blue and red. The way this works is that you mix up the blue and red shades by moving the mouse cursor. The more you move the cursor to the left, the more red you see. The more to the right, more blue. If you move the cursor back and forth, you get all shades. * The speed of the game, while you play: The faster you draw the lines, the faster the game is. The task might seem simple, but it's actually a bit of a challenge. The speed of the lines can be adjusted by moving the cursor up and down. Try it.

The North American T-6 Texan™ was an excellent design that served as a basic trainer in all branches of U.S. service as well as in countries worldwide. U.S. Navy pilots utilised the type under the SNJ designation, the most common versions being the SNJ-4, SNJ-5 and SNJ-6. The RAF was very taken with the design and adopted it as the Harvard. Later versions were manufactured in Canada and the type saw service in countries worldwide. An excellent all-round trainer, the type was quite good at teaching new pilots to avoid the accelerated stall, as a wing would snap round quite rapidly if the pilot was unwary. Approximately 17,000 of the type were built and some 350 are still airworthy. Features: 2D panel with applied brand new textures by Westwood Digital (BVG) No panel elements (only XML and textures) 3D cockpit with bump mapped panel and display lighting Precision flight model with fully emulated controls, highly detailed surface modeling, realistic engine sounds

Open Cockpit AI Aircraft The North American T-6 Texan was designed in 1954 and built by North American Aviation until it was withdrawn from service in 1969. It was the initial trainer designed for new pilots until the introduction of the T-34 Mentor in the late 1950s, which was a full-fledged jet trainer. Many nations and air forces used it, and even the Swiss Air Force had it for some time. Following the T-34, the T-6 was based on a distinctive concept to train pilots. It was designed for a single pilot and had a limited aerobatic capability, since the design was not stressed to the point of going supersonic, it was intended to be used as a low-speed, limited-aerobatic trainer. It had the appearance of a normal single-seat trainer, but it had a B-24 basic trainer-type cockpit. It had an airframe that was based on the Curtiss A-36 Apache, on which the first T-6 prototype was based. Powerplant was a Republic J-57 radial engine, producing afterburner and a large gearbox for propeller emulation, capable of 55 HP. the department. At the beginning of Episode 2, the player is sent to investigate a former Prohibition Era bootlegger's missing safe. The third episode takes place in the offseason. The player's rookie years have passed and the player is now an experienced police officer. He is sent to the Danish West Indies to investigate the all-alcohol-consuming and bootlegging ships roaming the seas. In Episode 3, the player is sent to investigate illegal immigration. The player is put into a full-on undercover costume, complete with a fake ponytail and an upside-down New York Yankees baseball cap with the team logo facing outward. Finally, in Episode 4, the player is sent to investigate drugs. The player is dragged into the investigation without warning and put through various scenarios. Developers

Different developers developed the series in the last two years. Episode 1 was developed by Sudscapes Productions LLC, Episode 2 by Lombart Games LLC, Episode 3 and 4 by Intuitive Games LLC. Since Episode 4, the producer is named Thomas Herzig. Episode 1 Sudscapes Productions LLC's first attempt at developing a game happened six years ago when they tried putting together the Lost simulation game Spin Cycle; however, that game was never released. Following that, Sudscapes collaborated with the NCsoft subsidiary Carbon Games to develop the Colorado miniature shooter Speed. Unfortunately, Speed did not become the commercial success that Sudscapes had hoped for, so the team decided to cut their losses and file bankruptcy. Sudscapes decided to employ the personal and financial support of the two former coworkers, Leo Borchert and Mike Colantonio, to become independent creative professionals and to create a new game from scratch. After a few months of research, Sudscapes created the initial sketch for Dirty Cop Simulator Episode 1: The Arrival in March 2011. On May 21st, 2011, Dirty Cop Simulator Episode 1: The Arri
