Aims: • To examine the absorption of albendazole from the development (eggs) and adult stage (TS) of the parasite. • To compare the absorption of albendazole from the development and adult of the parasite in an intact host with the absorption of albendazole from the same parasite from an in vitro culture medium in a mammalian cell culture Methods: Egg and TS tissue were recovered by surgical resection of the cyst in the bovine and pig, respectively. Albendazole was added to the re-isolated parasites and the concentration of albendazole was analyzed using liquid chromatography tandem mass spectrometry. A 96-well microtiter plate was used for the in vitro experiment. Each well contained a different concentration of albendazole (0.02-1.50 μM) to determine the maximum concentration at which the albendazole-treated parasite survived for 3 days. The number of living parasites was compared between the uninfected control cells and cells treated with albendazole. The experiment was performed in triplicate. Results: Albendazole was consistently absorbed by the TS of the parasite in the mammalian host, and absorption of albendazole was found to be dose dependent. Albendazole was recovered in the egg development, but not in the TS tissue from the parasite. Albendazole that was added to the cultured parasites in the in vitro experiment was absorbed

He kept to himself and always stayed within the guidelines. He was never involved with any trouble or problems, but one day, he escaped. He was so ashamed of his actions and so sure that he was about to get caught, he began spending all his time in the shower. However, one day, when he was down there with the door to the prison open, the Director came in and saw him. He did not notice anything wrong and thought he was doing the right thing. He told John that he could leave, but he would have to go through some checks before he was allowed to leave. John left the prison, cleaned his face and arms, and headed for the bus station. He was so confident that he would get away scot free that he didn't even take the time to lock up the prison...he was just about to leave when he found the map to his freedom. He picked up his stuff and headed to the bus station. There he saw a guy with a beard and a hat on to see a map he should be warned that he has been charged with a crime. He then turned into a red bird and flew away. The bird began to fly up high and was no longer seen. The story is just beginning now... stay tuned to see what happens next! Therefore, for these samples no contribution of total $\alpha 2$ -containing GABA receptors can be assumed. Moreover, the increase of $\alpha 2$ -mediated neurotransmission during LTP at MF-LH and LH-PAG synapses was similarly strong in all groups. In a previous study, the increase of neurotransmission at a synaptic site for the MF-LH synapse was suggested to contribute to the generation of LTP. Due to the fact that the Ca^{2+} sensor synaptotagmin-1 is strongly expressed in the CPL and that terminals of GABAergic interneurons express synaptotagmin-1 at both presynaptic and postsynaptic sites, we suggest a role for this factor in the differential modulation of neurotransmission in the two synapses investigated. This hypothesis of a role of synaptotagmin-1 at the MF-LH synapse is further supported by the fact that synaptotagmin-1 is also expressed in MF-LH interneurons ([@B55]). In our opinion, it appears highly unlikely that the classical $\alpha 2$ -mediated neurotransmission mechanism is fully altered due to altered expression or localization of this factor. The change in the amplitude of GABA \sim A \sim receptor-mediated inhibition, on the other hand, could be a result of altered localization of GABA \sim A \sim receptors in LH-PAG terminals. This factor could be either on the postsynaptic membrane at GABAergic synapses in the LH-PA
