I'm using vim as my editor, and I can open the cpp file within the Makefile and simply put my code inside using comments. When I hit C-c C-k (org-export-to-LaTeX), instead of exporting the file in LaTeX, it exports it to org-mode which can't be opened by my application. Is there a way to have org-mode export it as C++ code instead of as a plain text file? A: You can use the org-agexport-mode variable to export to a language that your application understands. For example, I have this in my init file: (setq org-ag-export-file-extensions '(("cpp" "cpp" "qt4" "qt4qml" "qml" "qml.html" "html" "htm") ("java" "java e79caf774b medicine it is important to obtain regular blood tests, and patients are asked to attend for testing on a regular basis. Furthermore, it is known that the result of certain tests requires that a sample of blood be taken from the patient at the time of testing. Certain types of operations can cause large amounts of blood to be released into the body, and many injuries occur where the amount of bleeding is minimal. One type of medical procedure that can have a significant effect on the amount of bleeding is surgery. During surgery a patient is often sedated and this can be used to ease the anxiety of having surgery or of having teeth extracted or similar treatments. Generally sedation can be provided by injecting a patient with a short-acting sedative. A skilled anaesthetist will keep the patient alert to the point where they can be fully awake and aware during surgery, but can also provide unconscious sedation throughout the operation. This can be achieved by injecting a low dose of the sedative near the tip of a needle, to minimise the amount of sedative reaching the brain. Sedation is usually provided using short-acting anaesthetics, and usually the patient is awake and able to move through the whole procedure. In the prior art, the recovery of patient during a surgical operation is typically completed after the operation is over. The patient has been anaesthetised, and at some point will be conscious and safe to move around. However, it is also common for patients to wish to remain in a surgical recovery position for a short time after anaesthesia wears off. The reasons for this vary. For example, the patient may want to maximise their comfort or recovery from anaesthesia. Other reasons include family members being present and needing to see the patient shortly, or the patient may want to move to another part of the hospital to recover from the treatment. It is known to provide a recovery/holding
