The king, Goverdhan (Achint Kaur), upon being informed by his minister, Bhairava (Prakash) that the princess has gone to the sky as soon as she reaches a palace, he goes to seek if he can be at her side. He succeeds and Goverdhan succeeds in saving her and taking her to the palace. In the palace, the king learns that the girl is his own child. The rest of the story is a flashback of the princess' life. The Princess, upon reaching a palace, throws away a ring given to her by her father. The King gives a golden 'Ritu' (dinghy) to a boatman in order to take his daughter to her home. The boatman understands from the crown on the golden Ritu that it is a 'hardening' object; he takes this as a blessing and leaves with the Ritu in the name of a deity. The boatman is only able to make a small distance from his home on the beach to his destination, but the Ritu is greatly infested with insects. The boatman takes a small mercy on the Ritu and places it in his home. He says he will be at prayer for the return of the 'Ritu.' While the boatman is praying, he has a vision that his daughter has been taken away by a crocodile. He fails to understand what his daughter had in the Ritu. He takes the Ritu to the goddess Mahakali on the sea, and, in reply to his cries, the goddess tells him that the Ritu must go through a river in the forest before it reaches the sea. However, the princess is taken away by the river in the Ritu. The boatman promises to remain near the river and will 'kill' a crocodile that comes in front of his home. The boatman says that one who removes a crocodile's head will be saved. The boatman becomes a crocodile. One day, when the princess is bathing in the river, there comes the boatman. He greets the princess. The boatman tries to stop the princess from bathing, but the princess stops him. The boatman says that he is a crocodile, and the princess is not afraid of him. She asks if he has been following her. The boatman says that he has been following
