ENJOY MY OTHER SITES: ProPilot Lamina ProPilot was a kind of half-size model airplane. It was designed by Lars Hedlund in the late 1970s in the AFA Forsberg company. As it was built with the help of fiberglass it had very similar lines to the first generation ASW Interceptor built by Erich Winkler. After his success Hedlund continued his model airplane and changed the name to Lamina ProPilot by adding 'Lamina' with the help of a Laminator or Appier. It was a simple half-scale model, which also could be flown by a child with a mental age of around eight years. Design The top of the aircraft consisted of a narrow-angle profile tailplane with rounded tips which did not have any curve. The tailplane was made in "Fiberglass" and was attached by means of a single rivet or point. The fuselage of the model plane was made in the same material. The body of the plane was carried on a metal structure to the right and left of the wing, which acted as the carriages of the wings. The wings, which had a very simple construction, had a single main curve. This curved portion of the wing was made by the use of a paper template. The lines of the wings were expressed in a very broad smooth curve. The wings were held onto the body by means of carbon fiber cables. The top of the fuselage was covered with a fiberglass sheet. On the top of the fuselage there were horizontal and vertical stabilizers which were made in a smooth rounded and curved design. The top of the fuselage was held into the metal structure by means of rivets or screws. The longitudinal axis of the model plane was made in a double curvature - that is, one more curvature in the bottom and another in the top. The empennage of the model was made with the help of the same material and had simple lines. The bottom
