Lung cancer is the leading cause of cancer-related death. Despite advances in diagnostic imaging, surgical resection, and chemotherapy, patients with non-small-cell lung cancer (NSCLC) exhibit a 5-year survival rate of less than 15%. Molecular genetic studies have begun to elucidate distinct characteristics of lung cancer subtypes. Epidemiologic studies reveal that cigarette smoking is the only confirmed risk factor. Retrospective analyses of tumor- and metastasis-derived genomes have revealed distinct genomic alterations of specific NSCLC subtypes, including epidermal growth factor receptor (EGFR) mutation in adenocarcinomas and p53 loss/mutation in squamous cell carcinomas. The prognostic significance of these molecular features is gaining recognition in clinical trials. Targeted therapies including EGFR tyrosine kinase inhibitors and p53-directed therapies have yielded substantial clinical benefits for patients with NSCLC bearing the above-described molecular alterations. Epidermal growth factor receptor and p53 alterations are each prognostic of a favorable response to a specific targeted therapy. In this review, we illustrate the progress that has been made with respect to identifying the molecular features of NSCLC subtypes and their potential role in improving clinical outcomes.Q: How to add a ListView with CheckBox inside a separate fragment in android I'm creating an app and I have created a fragment named "User" in which I have a listView showing the user's friends.
