Most of us have the nice perk of being able to get the holiday here in Australia during summer, but I am finding that this year my husband will be in UK for Christmas and I will be doing the cooking, cooking, cooking! I will work from home, do the prep work and cook, and then send the meal over to his flat. The problem with this is that it doesn't leave enough time to shower and then leave for work. Here is the catch 22 and the main reason why I am struggling with it... this year I am going to have a baby! I know that is the "good" reason and I am happy to find out more but I know for some people it is difficult to have a baby during holiday's. I was wondering if anyone else is in the same boat? It is really annoying for me and I am sure it is going to be the same for him. But maybe there is something that we can do to get more time off! Also, anyone have a good recipe for stuffing roast turkey and making a gravy? My other half hates turkey so I made chicken during the fasting months but the turkey this time is going to be a challenge. As lovely as the prospect of a baby is, you need to think about what you want to be doing with your time off. If you cannot afford any leave, I suggest that you should be concentrating on your study or your career, so you can be doing something productive with your time that make you a valuable member of the family and business environment. I'm going through the same thing. I worked until 11 last night, started cooking and now I have to be in work at 5.30. Lunch will have to be in after 5 and dinner in the early evening. I am so close to being a nervous wreck, dashes of anxiety every 15 minutes! I'm going through the same thing. I worked until 11 last night, started cooking and now I have to be in work at 5.30. c6a93da74d
