To characterize the racial differences in the presentation of systemic lupus erythematosus (SLE) in our referral practice, we reviewed the records of 116 patients with SLE (98 black, 18 white). At presentation, 83% of black patients had evidence of arthritis, compared with 53% of white patients. Black patients more frequently had glomerulonephritis (GN) (44% vs 19%) and antiphospholipid antibodies (46% vs 8%). Black patients with GN had lupus nephritis (class III or IV) more frequently (63% vs 25%) and were older (49 vs 32 years) than white patients with GN. Although the prevalence of thyroid disease was similar, the prevalence of thyroid-associated GN was significantly higher in blacks than in whites. The frequency of antinuclear antibody positivity was higher in white patients, whereas anti-double-stranded DNA positivity was higher in blacks. Coastal Organic Waste Advisory Fluoride Pollution Fluorocarbons are chemically stable, soluble gases. When fluorides are dissolved in water, they are chemically transformed into fluoride ions, which is extremely reactive and toxic. When concentrations of fluoride exceed 1 ppm, they can be deadly for humans. When waste is exposed to air, it is oxidized by oxygen and immediately releases fluorides into the environment. To reduce air pollution, wastewater and waste sludge should be treated properly, before being released into the environment. How to reduce Fluoride Pollution If you are a professional water supplier, use a treatment system that will reduce fluoride concentration to less than 1 ppm
