every time a russian star produces a mark, the $5,000 average it boosts the coffers of the russian skating federation and its ilk. and when the federation receives money from some $200 million of doping-tainted cash, a substantial amount of that can be subtracted from the price of the olympics. the federation has an incentive not just to preserve the integrity of the sport in russian skating, but also to preserve it in the broader sense of the country. a key figure in that decision is its president, alexander zhukov, who has worked with the us olympic committee since the mid-1990s and has been lobbying hard for the us hosting of the 2018 pyeongchang winter games.
