

Revel in the useful French customs (take a Euro for the restroom attendant, madame papi). Get hip to French luxury products (bonjour, covetable Rimowa luggage). And board the impossibly expensive Orient Express to the white sand beaches of the Riviera, where Emily is headed alone after Mathieu learns Emily had just got cheffed. It's all a sugar rush of dessert...with perhaps a bit too much meringue when it comes to Emily's wardrobe. While mad respect is due New York legend Pat Field, who did the costumes for Sex and the City and creates Emily's looks here, we're wondering if perhaps the costumes don't take us out of the flow of the action a bit too much. For example we're super-distracted studying a satin dinner coat Emily wears over a tiny sequin mini-dress to a drag show, or wondering how she sits down in her impossibly short dresses as she swans around the office. There's another reason that Emily in Paris is so fun. Because much like the other series on the small screen that we just cant get enough of, the show is loaded with steamy encounters that we can't wait to watch again. For example, as epic as it was for me to see Emily take a bow in her wedding gown during her Parisian wedding, it was even more magical to see her in bed with not just one man but two! After all, if you were ever feeling bored with that one dumb person, watching Emily in Paris will get you re-inspired. Tweet I love the first season of the show. The premise is so comical. We have the sex and the relationship that went along with that. It was so great to watch the dynamic between Emily and Mathieu play out. I loved the first season and even though the second season is going to have new characters like Olly, Mathieu and Emilie, I am still excited to watch more. The dynamic is great, we will see more people in the second season, but I am excited to see where the story goes. I hope the relationships continue to grow with each season.
