As I have already said, I only have experience reviewing Lightroom's latest Photoshop update, but based on recent discussions it appears that updates to Photoshop are even more frequent in the closed beta stage than they are in the public release stage for Lightroom. Photoshop continues to show pace and technical progress. However, we still have a long way ahead of us if Photoshop is going to function as a standalone product in comparison to the current alternatives and, of course, previous versions of Photoshop. Convincing photographers who have come to rely on GIMP and other open source alternatives to switch to Photoshop may be a non-trivial proposition. They still need a compelling reason to switch from the free software they now know and use so well, especially considering most of them don't break even when using it. Then there are the question of licensing costs, which prevent Photoshop from becoming a viable alternative for many photographers - especially those with multiple workflows or on the go. In the case of high end or professional users, a subscription model may be a better approach. Transferring Photoshop files between Lightroom and Photoshop is no longer instantaneous, but it is still available. FairPoint Communications, Inc. (NASDAQ: LUVV) today announced that its financial condition has been materially and adversely impacted by the overall health of the telecommunications market, particularly the telecommunications services and equipment markets in which FairPoint operates. FairPoint's ability to accelerate long-term earnings growth, and to return to a path of sustainable, normalized profitability, will depend in significant part on the success of our plans to reduce the significant, and growing debt levels and other fixed charge obligations in FairPoint's balance sheet. To date, FairPoint has achieved results that have exceeded our expectations and at the same time have resulted in substantial operating losses that, if continued, would be material to FairPoint's financial and operational performance. FairPoint's financial condition is dependent on several factors, including the continued rapid evolution and growth of the telecommunications services and equipment markets in which we operate, which are both highly cyclical and volatile, the pricing of our products and services, changes in management and operational efficiencies, new equipment offerings and fair weather conditions.
