Adobe is always looking out for its users to bring changes in their work. They are also responsible for making the software more responsible, no matter how useful it may be for the users. In this regard, Photoshop CS6 introduced the Layer Edit which lets the users edit the layers alone and easily. With Layers and masks, Adobe gives Photoshop an easier way to edit images. However, not every Photoshop user has the time or money to employ these tools properly. To help them with his tools, Adobe designed an easier way to make the masks transparent. The idea of doing transparency in Photoshop has been around since version 1, but the CS6 is the first time it is done seriously. This tool is very welcomed by the beginners, professional designers and hacks alike. The biggest gain of using this transparency tool is the enhanced ability to eliminate almost all clicks in editing an image. Photoshop is the most famous tool for designing for the web. It continues to be so, and with CS6, Adobe introduced a revolutionary content aware feature called "Content Aware Move." However, the Content Aware feature uses different criteria and actually tries to predict the content inside the images and make the changes instantly. This feature helps Photoshop users to do the work with less hassle and one click. At the same time, the results are improved.

An image may be exported in a variety of formats (PDF, JPEG, GIF, TIFF, etc.), and the original file may be edited and saved. Sorry, but I hardly understand what it is, but still those things are in my mind.
