

The ProximLock application allows you to find out if your Bluetooth device is out of range, and to lock your computer to prevent the access to the device. The application does not provide real-time information of the device (e.g. connection time, signal quality, etc.). ProximLock is free, it is a very simple and intuitive application. The source code is available at How to use: ProximLock can be used in different ways. For example, you can launch it automatically when you disconnect your device to lock your computer. Or you can keep ProximLock open, and it will launch automatically when your device is out of range. See the file 'LICENSE' for further information. Changes: Version 1.1 - FileProximLock.zip is now ready for distribution - Minor changes (remarks etc.) Version 1.0 - First version (last version at SourceForge) A: Why not use the built-in built-in Windows pop-ups? They give the signal strength and time to connect, it's generally pretty easy to distinguish an accidental connection from a connection to something you've lost. A: I use SnoopPro and show the network icon, it will list your bluetooth devices (any apps) and their status as well. The only downside is that you need to have Bluetooth turned on. It's a paid product, but it's well worth it, especially for someone like me who has a small Mac and loads of bluetooth devices. Q: How can I avoid overloading the array? In case I have a programm that: - has a client thread, - server thread (receiving and sending messages) and - an array (list) that is populated with messages. My question is: Is it normal to place the string message into the array, or is it better to create a new class and have the message be of that
