Tiny Disk Cleaner is an application that you can use to delete junk files from your computer in order to free up space and ultimately boost your system's performance. The interface of the program is plain and simple to work with. You shouldn't have any problems in getting around Tiny Disk Cleaner's features, since you don't have too many options at your disposal. So, you can go to the "Settings" area and set the extensions of junk files that you want Tiny Disk Cleaner to take care of. After the scanning process is completed, you can check out the name, size and path of each file. Once you select which items you want to delete, you can set Tiny Disk Cleaner to either clean it or send it to Recycle Bin, as well as load a skin for the interface. The program runs on a pretty low amount of system resources, can take a while to finish a scan job but it is very thorough. No errors have popped up during our tests and Tiny Disk Cleaner did not freeze or crash. On the other hand, you cannot configure any advanced settings. Plus, the interface is outdated. We mainly recommend Tiny Disk Cleaner to first-time users.

Q: What are the differences between a UIImageView and a UIImage? If I have an UIImageView that's loading a UIImage from a plist, how does it differ from simply loading a UIImage from a plist? I think that the plist is a file, so that's not a fair comparison. A: UIImageView manages itself. It's delegate will be notified of the action of the imageView and will present the actual image or whatever you set in the imageView A simple example of the UIImageView will be as - (void)viewDidLoad { [super viewDidLoad]; UIImageView *imageView = [[UIImageView alloc] initWithImage:[UIImage imageNamed:@"sample.png"]]; // Do any additional setup after loading the view, typically from a nib. [self.view addSubview:imageView]; } A: The UIImageView is the UI element that the user sees. The UIImage is the actual content of the view. Think of the UIImageView as of a wrapper around the UIImage. This is a very basic overview

The problem with having so many files on your hard drive is that most of them are junk files that you don't need, and taking up precious storage space. Whether they are temporary files, garbage files, duplicates, or backups of files, they slow down your computer, eat up your disk space and can be cluttering. What you will notice is that junk files and temporary Internet files will still be here after a hard drive defragmenting routine. If this is the case, you need to delete them. Tiny Disk Cleaner is a relatively new program that helps you delete files and recycle them. What's more, if you don't want to delete the files or are unsure about whether or not they are junk, you can just click "view", choose "recursively" and it will check the files for you.
