In our laboratory, we have been studying the chicken lysozyme cluster to establish the relationship between its evolution and the particular immune function of the chicken. In this study, we established a method for PCR amplification of the chicken lysozyme locus using the SmartAmp™ system. This method is simple, fast, and less laborious than the conventional thermal asymmetric interlaced PCR. We used it to investigate the allele polymorphism of the chicken lysozyme cluster in a population of commercial chickens and in a set of cormorant-origin chickens. This PCR protocol allowed us to identify two new alleles of the chicken lysozyme gene and to show that the alleles found in a set of cormorant-origin chickens were very similar to the alleles found in chickens commercially bred for meat production.As a voice of the industry, its my job to hear from you.
