"Bringing" the new features to CC Classic subscribers is a bit of a double-whammy. You are burdened with the responsibility of updating the software on as many systems as your clients use. Photoshop is the most complex of digital art applications. If you have a large digital portfolio as well as a photography business, the extra time and effort required to bring the software to paid subscribers could put you out of business. This is where the paid upgrade option comes in. Lightroom CC offers a free Desktop version, which can be distributed to any number of subscribers. This Lightroom Classic version is the last purchase you will ever make; it is the glue that holds the software together. Lightroom CC will be supported through the end of 2016. Lightroom Classic will continue to run as normal, providing the community with value far beyond that. The most important benefit of upgrading to Lightroom CC is that you no longer need to update the desktop version with new updates. That task is now solely the responsibility of your clients. There are many new touches for the desktop version of Lightroom CC. It's got more presets, more graphics, a new screen layout, an improved performance and stability, and other minor enhancements. The interface is clean, fast, and responsive. The new Layering panel in Photoshop is a welcome addition for digital artists. You will never have issues accidentally deleting an image "layer", for example. Now, Lightroom CC tells you when you delete a layer. This is probably the most notable difference between Lightroom and Photoshop. Photoshop is smarter about organizing images. Lightroom is more intuitive and simplistic. You can still organize documents via folders, Smart Collections, or Collections. Photoshop includes features that allow you to compress images for on-the-fly backup, such as the Save in TIFF Files dialog. The latter is available for Creative Cloud subscribers only.
