Adobe Shadow Control is a collection of settings, grouped into three tabs: Common, Shadows, and Highlights. Common works well for me. The Shadows tab is less useful as it automatically sets the metering to "Spot" instead of using the "manual" mode. In return, the Highlights tab offers six sliders, representing fill, mid-tone, shadows, bright whites, brightness, and contrast (for details on the controls see the captioned image). The biggest changes for the new version are the integration of Eye's many filters and the addition of Nik Software's tools. All seven of Eye's filters now appear in the Filters gallery. In addition, you can apply "bulge," "bloom," "contrast," "font," "gear," "garage," "grey," "grading," "highlights and shadows," "ink," "keyway," "ledet," "lens," "lathe," "matte," "oil," "parallax," "poster," "rimless," "sepia," "sketch," and "tailor." And that's not to mention the fact that you can now apply 24 preset models of Adobe's buttery-soft Nik Colors to your image. And that's just the beginning. Lightroom 5 also includes Nik Software's sharpening and noise-reduction tools Preview, ProCamera, Nik Color Efex Pro 2, and Lightroom Mobile. Lightroom 5 is pretty much flawless. I'm not sure how many people purchase Lightroom specifically for its package of tools, but if you're one of those people, you'll appreciate the new version. Mac support is good, and the update is equally painless for that platform. The import process is flawless, too. It will import a TIFF image, a JPEG image, or a RAW image. The last option includes an "Additional Files" subfolder containing SmartObjects for all saved metadata. Exporting also went well. I was able to create catalogs and save them in various formats, including one to my mobile device. Of course, you can create a slideshow, too.

When an image has been processed or resized, a filing extension is added to the name of the original file. The main purpose of a filing extension is to easily differentiate a processed image from the original. For example, a file named “file.pdf” would become “file.jpg” after processing, because Adobe Photoshop automatically adds the “.pdf” file extension to the original file. However, if the original file name ends with the file extension, Photoshop would be unable to distinguish the file. To address this issue, Photoshop offers the “file.psd” file extension.
