Dissimilarity of the reactions of the brain functioning in the first and second stage of gestation is established in the experiments on the isolated preparations of the sensomotor and autonomic nervous system, under conditions when the functional activity of the brain is observed. In the first stage of the pregnancy the basic positive sign of the intactness of the nervous system in the processes of the motor and vegetative information transmission is represented by restoration of functional activity in the time of spontaneous depolarization of the muscle after preliminary stimulation of the nerve in the premonitory and sustained afterpainful flexor reflex. In the second stage of the pregnancy there appears in the process of the premonitory and--above all--sustained depolarization of the muscle afterpainful flexor reflex. In this period the vegetative reactions are determined by the weaker specific effects.// // SCCapturedExceptionHandler.h // Sparkle // // Created by Andy Matuschak on 3/12/06. // Copyright 2006 Andy Matuschak.
