This document contains the policy and procedures for downloading and using music and/or video files in MP3 format on Internet servers maintained by Howard University. The intent is to raise awareness on the illegal usage of MP3 so as to maximize the value of the Internet as a means of communicating with the University's internal and external publics. On the Internet, copyright laws remain the same. Reproductions or distributions of sound recordings, which have not been authorized by the copyright owner, violate federal and, possibly state law. While there is an exception for copying for personal use onto cassette tapes and some digital media, that exception does not apply to the Internet. This means that, as a general rule, downloading, uploading or otherwise distributing MP3's without authorization is illegal. This law applies even if no profit is derived from the activity. The only LEGAL way to reproduce a piece of recorded music -- uploading, downloading, copying from a CD, etc. - is to get permission from the owners of these different copyrights. This is called obtaining a "license". Overall, "Rules" is a fantastic song that showcases August Alsina's incredible talent and creativity.
