Black boots for women are a perfect match with most dresses. For instance, you can style your knee-high boots with mini or midi dresses and make them simple by going for a contrasting or monochromatic look. Nonetheless, your Chelsea boots, ankle boots, and others also look trendy and stunning when you wear them with a dress. "Combat boots pair very nicely with dresses during transitional weather," Barnes says. "The clunkier silhouette juxtaposed with a shorter hemline is incredibly chic. Plus, you can wear them with bare legs now, and tights and a jacket later. Personally, I really love combat boots paired with an oversized blazer dress, but they also look amazing when contrasted with highly 'feminine' pieces. Most recently, platform combat boots were paired with metallic evening dresses on the Vogue World runway, a combo that is just the epitome of cool." "Back in my figure skating days, we used heat and moisture to break in our boots; the same can be applied to combat boots," Barnes explains. "Wearing a very thick pair of socks around the house will help warm up your feet and stretch the boots. I also recommend rubbing stick deodorant on any areas you're worried about friction. (Weird, I know, but it works!) And, of course, blister pads come in handy when you inevitably get blisters. It might suck at first, but if you can push past the initial blisters, you'll break your boots in just fine." Whether you're looking to spruce up your favorite skinny jeans with a block heel or add a mid-calf boot to your favorite dress, our ankle booties are perfect for the job. When heel height is no issue, our 6-inch ankle boots will send you soaring. Chelsea boots are a great substitute for combat boots in any rugged outfit.
