Well, sort of obvious, but worth mentioning: Spore. The cell stage is pretty much just this game more or less, but each stage doesn't last very long and the meat of the game is focused around the space stage. Are you planning on making any other kind of variations to this game using the same mechanics you had in it before in a completely different version that you have in mind and might make later, or do you just plan on improving it bit by bit later on down the road? In theory it should be possible to play the universal version on Android provided a keyboard is plugged into the device, but as this game was created for a game jam over 3 years ago I have no intention of going back to add touchscreen support, sorry.

The gameplay is very easy to get into: all you need to do is move the hole around and let various objects drop into it and disappear into the unknown. The trick is to only go under the objects that can fit inside: start with consuming pedestrians, poles and bushes, move on to cars and ultimately to large buildings. You can also eat other black holes if they are smaller than you. The game takes place in a city area, so the map is comprised of office buildings, apartment complexes, parking lots, roads parks and many other areas usually associated with urban environment. The surroundings are instantly familiar to anyone who has ever seen a big city, so they are pretty easy to navigate. The best game strategy is to plan your way around the areas in advance: think of the most efficient route that will give you enough smaller objects in the beginning and will eventually introduce something bigger and bigger to chew on. If you have been having trouble making it to the top of the score board and besting other players, these tips will hopefully help you overcome some of the major difficulties. Ultimately, we tend to produce best results after entering that focused meditative flow state of mind, but you need to become really comfortable and familiar with the game in order to

If you love eating seafood you will enjoy the game called Swallow the Sea. It is an interesting little game that involves you eating various gross fish, much like a game of Hungry Hippos. In Swallow the Sea you take control of an aquatic organism called a spongy little zygote and have to eat smaller organisms to increase your size. This game is a bit different from the typical fishing games where you are more concerned with gathering as many fish as possible, in this game you have to eat the different creatures floating around in the water. Although the game is similar to fishing, it does have a few differences that make it quite different. For this game I made use of two separate but interconnected concepts: one was making a game that looked very similar to an over-world sea floor map where you could see different islands, some with islands where there were monsters chasing small particles, and other islands where there were corridors and passages tinged with blood vessels and organs. The second concept that was used was to implement the idea of pixel art, so that all the creatures, as well as the environments featured a lot of pixel art. As this was a game based on eating fish this was a natural choice. As with most games that rely on unique visualization, the pixel art adds a lot to the effect.
